

No accident

I read about the tragic death of Lauren Mulkey in the March 19 Tribune and saw it described as an auto "accident."

It was not. Her death was caused by another driver being distracted by his cell phone and running a red light. This is a choice to pay more attention to one's cell phone than to safely operating the car he is driving, with the consequence being another person's death. Once again, this was not an accident but a choice. The big question is how many of us make the same choice on a daily basis.
